Standing on a rise overlooking the Hudson River, the Hyatt-Livingston House is located on the old Kings Highway or Albany-New York Post Road within the former boundaries of Philipsburg Manor.

The original structure on the site was a simple tenant-farmet's dwelling constructed ca. 1698. During the 18th century the Hyatt family enlarged the dwelling to a five-bay, two-and-ahalf story structure which now composes the central portion of the Hyatt-Livingston House. Standing upon a fieldstone foundation, the structural system consists of wood framing which has been sheathed with clapboards. Portions of the walls are brick-filled. Two interior end chimneys are located on the southern end of the east and west sides of the structure. Five gabled dormer windows on the south and north elevations and one window on the west gable end provide light and ventilation to the garret. On the south elevation the gable roof extends beyond the walls to two-story pillars and forms a fullheight porch equal in length to that of the structure itself. A shed roof extends beyond the main structure on the north elevation to form a small one-story wing and a two-bay entry porch.

Between 1779 and 1810 Philip Livingston constructed the west wing, parallel to the Post Road and perpendicular to the older Hyatt farmhouse which became a rear wing to Livingston's prominent addition. Two stories in height, five bays in length, and two bays in width, the wing is constructed of a wood frame which is sheathed by clap-boards and which rests upon a fieldstone foundation. At both the first and second story level a balustraded porch extends the length of the west elevation, and six doric columns support the floor of the second-story porch. French windows on both stories permit access between the interior and the porches. Circulation is also possible beneath the first-floor porch along the length of the raised basement, created by the downward slope of the land.

The design of the front or west elevation of the West wing is dominated by the triangular pediment above the cornice. The pediment and the two consoles beneath the elaborate cornice at either end of the pediment suggest a central pavillion in the three middle bays. The central focus of the design is also expressed in the fanlight, surmounted by a keystone, under the peak of the pediment, and in the balustrade which encloses the deck of the hipped roof directly above the pediment.

One interior end chimney at the northern end of the structure was built with the wing. The design is kept more or less symmetrical by the presence of the westernmost chimney of the Hyatt farmhouse which, although set farther back than the northern chimney, was incorporated within the west wing.

Among the earlier features which remain are wide plank floors, a large stone fireplace, handhewn oak beams, some rooms of eighteenth-century proportions, and a fine Federal period staircase. During the first quarter of the twentieth century Messmore Kendall engaged Walter Chambers to restore the structure. Two marble mantels from a demolished Bowling Green home have been installed.

A two-story, modern, gabled wing has been added to the east end of the Hyatt farmhouse, and directly east stands a modern structure combining a garage and living quarters.

Isolated on a bit of open space within a densely developed residential area of Westchester County, the Hyatt-Livingston House is a distinctive visual and historical landmark in the Village of Dobbs Ferry. For a period during the Revolution General Washington used the structure as his headquarters. The dwelling juxtaposes the simple, substantial character of early eighteenth-century rural architecture in the Hudson Valley, and the more refined, elaborated design of a late eighteenth century gentleman's residence.

The original structure was built ca. 1698 and was first occupied by John Hyatt who rented the farmstead for 9 £ per annum from Frederick Philipse of Philipseburg Manor. During the Revolution the house is believed to have served as General Washington's headquarters for a period in 1781.

In October 1779 the Cormissioners of Forfeiture confiscated and sold the Philipse property. The Hyatt farm and dwelling were purchased by Philip Livingston, a successful merchant and a member of the prominent Livingston family. Livingston's career included service as Registrar of the Prerogative Court of New York, Secretary to the last Royal Governor of the Province of New York, Secretary to the Governor-General of West Florida (1770-1775), Secretary of the Provisional Government of New York and Anti-Federalist Representative from Westchester County to the New York Convention.

Prior to his death in 1810, Livingston added the pretentious west wing to the Hyatt farmhouse. By constructing the more elaborate west wing perpendicular to the Hyatt farmhouse, Livingston re-oriented the dwelling toward the River. The farmhouse assumed the position of a rear wing to the elegantly designed addition. The balustrade surrounding the deck, and the pediment, its fanlight, and supportive consoles, centralize the design and add a degree of sophistication to the west facade.

Number 8.

By 1823 the house and accompanying lands passed to Philip Livingston's eldest son, Peter Van Brugh Livingston. The property was subsequently acquired by Stephen Archer, a Quaker who is believed to have used his residence as a shelter for fugitive slaves en route to Canada. Occupied by Archer's family until 1912, the dwelling stood vacant for four years until it was purchased and renovated by Messmore Kendall, prominent lawyer and owner of the Capital Theatre in New York City, who resided there until his death in 1959.
